The 2010 Brunello di Montalcino Giobi shows some rough edges with sour cherry, wild berry, moist earth, balsam herb, fresh plum and bitter almond. The wine is tight and nervous with some thorny spots along the way. A few of the aromatic transitions are abrupt and the wine veers from ripe fruit and strawberry to bitter cranberry in quick succession. In this sense, the wine is true to the variety. Sangiovese is difficult to tame and you get that sense here. The wine should flesh out with a few more years in the bottle.
